Origin of Green Tea in Yame

The origin of green tea production in Yame can be traced back to 1423, when a Buddhist monk, Master Shuzui, brought tea seeds from China, where he had previously studied, back to Japan.

There he planted them to teach people how to produce tea in what is now Kasahara, Kurogi Town in Yame Country, Fukuoka Prefecture, near where he erected Reiganji Temple. Green tea produced in Yame is characterised by a full, round and rich flavour with little bitterness and astringency.

Made with maximum care from its cultivation in the tea plant through the production process, green tea from Yame is given high credit nationwide as premium quality tea.
